DALE'S

The Frenchman loves his native wine,
The German loves his beer,
The Englishman his 'arf and 'arf
Because it brings good cheer;
The Scotchman loves his whiskey straight
Because it brings on dizziness,
The American has no choice at all—
He drinks the whole damned business.

Now fill your glasses one an' a'
And drink the toast I gie ye, O
"To merry chiels and lasses brau,
And every joy be wi' ye, O."
Fair fa' the whiskey, O,
Fair fa' the whiskey, O,
What wad a drouthy body do,
If t'were nae for the whiskey, O?

For what this house affords us
Come, praise the brewer most—
Who caught into a bottle
The barley's gentle ghost.
Until our parching throttles
In silence we employ,
Like geese, that drink a mouthful
Then stretch their necks with joy!
